Implementing Inquiry in the Classroom

Implementing an inquiry-based approach is a valuable development for any forward-looking school, yet it can also be a significant challenge. This hand-on workshop will help you meet that challenge, providing practical ideas and strategies for more effective planning, teaching and assessing.

- What makes a successful unit of inquiry?
- Which subject areas should be integrated?
 - How can inquiry work for students with limited English proficiency?
 - How do we build in time for meaningful investigation of student questions?
 - How is inquiry perceived in different cultures?
 - How can inquiry help us differentiate for diverse student learning needs?
 - How can we integrate essential skills and understandings?
 - How can we help students ask good questions?
 - How can we develop good teacher questions?
 - How can we choose the best units?
 - How can we assess inquiry?

PUTTING IT INTO PRACTICE
IN ALLIANCE WITH
TEACHER TRAINING ACADEMY- TÜRKİYE

Putting it into Practice is an independent integrated programme providing practical support to teachers and schools worldwide. Drawing on 25+ years of experience of good educational practice, our workshops offer high-quality professional development opportunities for globally-minded educators covering all aspects of primary education and whole-school management through an extensive range of modules which, together with a substantial databank of support materials, provides a comprehensive training & implementation system. We have directly supported more than 200 schools worldwide, organising and leading inservice training workshops, courses and conferences and acting as consultants on a wide range of topics. Our Primary Inquirer School membership gives your school ongoing access to our support materials, enabling you to become more effective and efficient in the delivery of your programme.

Workshop leaders Lesley & Kenneth Snowball

Educational Director, Lesley Snowball, is a special education, language and curriculum specialist with extensive experience as a teacher, administrator, consultant and workshop leader worldwide. Recent key roles have included director of The International School of Budapest, Head of Lower School/Deputy Director with the International School of Amsterdam (the first authorised PYP school in the world) and founding director of Putting it into Practice. She has also been closely involved with Project Zero initiatives, ECIS International Teacher Certification and as an adjunct professor with George Mason University developing and teaching FastTrain and IB studies courses. She is a graduate of Durham, London and Bath Universities and is on the Board of the Alliance for International Education. Co-director Kenneth Snowball has a background in engineering and systems development and has been involved in international education for 15 years providing design & training support for a range of international organisations. Together Kenneth & Lesley were part of the team responsible for the original development, publication and implementation of the IBO PYP, and now provide training and support to more than 200 schools worldwide through their Putting it into Practice initiative.
